A NEW NATIONAL MONUMENT?

OBAMA TO NAME STONEWALL INN FIRST NATIONAL MONUMENT FOR GAY RIGHTS

Associated Press

New York's iconic Stonewall Inn, where the modern gay rights movement took root, will become the first national monument honoring the history of gays and lesbians in the U.S. under a proposal President Obama is preparing to approve.

Designating the small swath of land will mark a major act of national recognition for gay rights advocates and their struggles over the past half-century. Since the 1969 uprising in Greenwich Village, the U.S. has enacted anti-discrimination protections, allowed gays and lesbians to serve openly in the U.S. military and legalized same-sex marriage nationwide.

Though land must still be transferred to the federal government and other details worked out, the president is expected to move quickly to greenlight the monument following a public meeting Monday in Manhattan, according to two individuals familiar with the administration's plans. They weren't authorized to discuss the plans publicly and requested anonymity.

Next month marks Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender Pride Month in the U.S.

The gritty tavern, known colloquially as the Stonewall, became a catalyst for the gay rights movement after police raided it on June 28, 1969. Bargoers fought back, and many more joined in street protests over the following days in an uprising widely credited as the start of large-scale gay activism in New York and around the world. Annual pride parades in hundreds of cities commemorate the rebellion.

The White House declined to comment. Yet Obama has paid tribute to the site before, most notably in his second inaugural address in 2013. In what's believed to be the first reference to gay rights in an inaugural address, Obama said the principle of equality still guides the U.S. "just as it guided our forebears through Seneca Falls, and Selma, and Stonewall."

New York lawmakers have long advocated for a national designation for the Stonewall. Last year, New York City made it a city landmark—the first named primarily because of significance to LGBT history. In Congress, Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand and Rep. Jerrold Nadler—both Democrats—are pushing legislation to make the Stonewall a national park while urging Obama to commemorate the site through executive authority.

Proposals the Obama administration is considering include Christopher Park, a small public area on the street where the Stonewall is located, as well as the surrounding vicinity. At 51 Christopher St., where two adjoining buildings once housed the gay bar, the building where the current Stonewall Inn operates is still a popular gathering place. The structures still have the brick-and-stucco facade that greeted bargoers in 1969.

A number of procedural steps stand between the Stonewall and formal designation by the president. The first step comes Monday evening at a public school in Manhattan, first reported by the Washington Post. The Interior Department said Interior Secretary Sally Jewell and National Park Service

Monument dedications

President Obama has made wide use of his power to designate monuments, not only to protect millions of acres of wilderness and ocean but also to honor groups whose struggles for equal treatment have become milestones in U.S. history. Last month, he named a historic Washington home as the Belmont-Paul Women's Equality National Monument.

Director Jon Jarvis will attend an open meeting about proposals to "protect Christopher Park for future generations."

The Human Rights Campaign and other gay rights groups cheered the forthcoming announcement. Corey Johnson, an openly gay New York City councilman who represents the area, said it was "incredibly important" for the federal government to recognize the site.

"What happened at Stonewall and at Christopher Park is a key chapter in American history," Johnson said.

Two couples, two problems, one simple solution: Talk

Anna Pulley

@annapulley redeye@redeye
chicago.com

Dear Anna,
I'm a straight woman, 27, and have been with my boyfriend for two months. Sometimes I'll go out drinking and dancing with my gay boyfriends, and occasionally we will make out. It's totally platonic and fun, but my boyfriend sees this as cheating. I do not. Is it cheating? I'm not trying to be an asshole, but I don't see why he's so threatened.

—Friendly Frenching

Dear FF,

In cases like this, in which two people disagree on where the boundary should be drawn, I think it's important to focus less on whether something is definitively cheating or not cheating—because everyone's hard line is different—and to instead focus on whether said activity, wasty-face gay boy smoochin' in your case, is hurting your partner (yep!) and whether it's an easy habit to fix (yep again).

Your intentions may be platonic and innocent, and you might not even care if your boyfriend went out and macked on some lesbians, but if abstaining from this one small act would give your boyfriend peace of mind, why wouldn't you consider it?

Regardless of what I, a stranger on the internet, think, it's ultimately up to you and him to define the particular terms of your relationship. When you find yourself stuck or butting heads, strive for empathy; compassion and common ground.

Or at the very least, don't do it in front of him.

Dear Anna,
My girlfriend of two years and I are watching "House of Cards" on Netflix together. I went out of town for work recently, and when I came back she told me she went ahead in the show without me and that I should catch up on my own. I know it's dumb, but I was upset by this! Why do I feel so irritated? —Netflix

Dear N,

Because you feel left out. Because part of the whole "keeping intimacy alive" thing involves bonding over shared activities. Because you are probably upset about a deeper issue and this scratched the surface of that wound. Because, even though it's "dumb," it's also not a very nice thing to do to one's partner.

Allow yourself to be vulnerable and tell your girlfriend that her going ahead in the show upset you. A little self-reflection would also probably help you figure out why this small thing led to a big reaction. Chew on it for a day or an hour or even a few minutes. You might find that it wasn't Netflix at all, but something else entirely; like work stress, or wanting to reconnect with your girlfriend after a trip away, or the throes of a previously unknown and epic crush on Kevin Spacey.

Either way, talk it out, shake it off and queue up, son.

Ever wondered why racehorses have such creative names?

Tribune news service

You won't find any Fidos, Rexes or Tiggers at the Kentucky Derby on Saturday. That's because naming a racehorse is nothing like naming a family pet.

First off, owners have to abide by the rules set forth by the Jockey Club. The guidelines include no famous people without special permission, nothing bawdy or vulgar, and nothing that's already been taken. Which is tough because there are about 450,000 names in the Jockey Club database already.

Beyond that, it's basically a free-for-all, though many horses are anything but random. Here are the origins of the 20 animals in this year's field, ranked horse-racing style.

Note: For horse racing novices, a sire is the horse's father and the dam is the mother.

STOP! If you want to play RedEye's Kentucky Derby drinking game, don't read this just yet. Turn to Page 18 to try to guess whether it's a horse's name or a Chicago craft beer. Then come back to read up on all the names you missed.

Win

Suddenbreakingnews: This horse was going to be Breakingnews, but that name was taken when owner Samuel Henderson applied for it. So he added the "sudden." Interestingly enough, Henderson had no idea that his trainer Donnie Von Hemel has a niece, Molly Young, who is a reporter at The Oregonian in Portland.

Exaggerator: Inspired by trainer Keith Desormeaux's assistant and girlfriend, Julie Clark, because "she exaggerates everything," he said.

Lani: Lani's dam is Heavenly Romance, and the word lani is Hawaiian for "the sky of the heavens," said Keita Tanaka, interpreter for Lani's trainer Mikio Matsunaga.

Mohaymen: Named by Shadwell Farm owner Sheikh Hamdan bin Rashid Al Maktoum. Farm manager Rick Nichols said the sheikh names all of his horses himself. Mohaymen means "to dominate" in Arabic.

Majesto: A combination of the names of the two sons of owner Alejandro Ceballos, Mauro and Jesus, according to media reports.

Place

Mor Spirit: This horse is owned by Danish entrepreneur Michael Lund Petersen. Spokeswoman Emmy Sikorski said Petersen's mother still lives in Denmark and will celebrate her 90th birthday on May 18. In Danish, "Mor" means mother. "Michael's wife, Charlene, came up with the name 'Mor Spirit' in honor of Michael's mother and her feisty and spirited energy and personality," Sikorski said.

Gun Runner: Winchell Thoroughbreds farm manager David Fiske said owner Ron Winchell picked it. "I don't think Ron even owns a gun, it just sounded like something strong and masculine," Fiske said.

Oscar Nominated: His name was inspired by his dam, Devine Actress.

Danzing Candy: This horse's sire is Twirling Candy, whose dam was House of Danzing.

Outwork: As a 2-year-old, he outworked all the other horses, said Repole Stable's racing manager, Jim Martin.

Shagaf: This horse's name is Arabic for "fond of"; he also was named by Shadwell Farm owner Sheikh Hamdan bin Rashid Al Maktoum.

Destin: Named by owners Kim and Randy Gullatt of Twin Creeks Racing Stables. "When Randy and I were young, living in Louisiana, the nearest place to go for summer vacations was Destin, Florida, with the white sandy beaches," Kim Gullatt said. "But mostly we like the meaning of Destin—'Fate for which you were meant.'"

Show

My Man Sam: Named after co-owner

Sol Kumin's son.

Nyquist: Named for Detroit Red Wings forward Gustav Nyquist.

Trojan Nation: Owned by University of Southern California superfan Aaron Sones.

Whitmore: Named by trainer and co-owner of Ron Moquett in honor of a high school friend.

Tom's Ready: One of two horses in the Derby named after Tom Benson, owner of both the New Orleans Saints and Pelicans. Tom's Ready was Benson's first purchase, explained spokesman Greg Bensel, and he's sired by More Than Ready.

Creator: "They named him after God," Bethany Wurl, marketing manager for WinStar Farm, said of farm president Elliott Walden and owner Kenny Troutt.

Mo Tom: Also named for Saints and Pelicans owner Tom Benson, Mo Tom was sired by Uncle Mo.

Brody's Cause: Brody's Cause (whose sire is Giant's Causeway) is named after the son of Reed Weston, who helped pick the horse for owner Dennis Albaugh.

Bears linemen: Critics don't understand our job

Chicago Tribune

Kyle Long, Bobby Massie and a panel of other offensive linemen disparaged Pro Football Focus' grading system and chided other critics who "don't understand what an offensive lineman does" during a roundtable interview with CBS Sports' Pete Prisco.

Long decried the unrealistic expectations faced by fellow guards and other positions on the line during the panel discussion published Wednesday.

"We're the Mushroom Club," he said. "They throw us in a closet, feed us [bleep] and expect us to come out a finished product."

Long also said, "The system is set up where we don't have a voice. All we are are robots. Robots that get graded."

Massie, who will play right tackle for the Bears this fall, questioned how websites such as Pro Football Focus can grade players when they can't be entirely sure what their assignments are on each play.

"They don't know the play," he said. "They don't know what each lineman has to do."

Massie was even more direct in assailing the lack of teaching from most coaching staffs.

"In practice you have to do what the coaches want to make them happy. Make them feel like they have the big [bleep] in the room," he said. "On game day, you have to do your own stuff. The coaches, they're not out there blocking. They're in a big, comfortable chair with the clicker. The O-line and D-line are the best athletes on the field. It's not the quarterback, the receivers or the corners. We're going against the biggest, strongest, fastest in the world."

THE MOUTHWATCH

"For us, it never showed up where his short arms or his strength were a problem. And I don't think it will in the NFL. Cody, whatever he'll be taught, he's going to do it and execute it well."

— Kansas State offensive line coach Charlie Dickey, who coached new Bears lineman Cody Whitehair

Leicester City fans after the Foxes were named English Premier League soccer champions GETTY IMAGES

THE DIGITS

$145,000

That's how much John Micklethwait would have won if he had made his customary $29 bet (20 pounds) on Leicester City to win the English Premier League this season, according to The Washington Post. The Foxes were a 5,000-1 underdog heading into this season, but Micklethwait, the editor-in-chief of Bloomberg News, opted not to place the bet because he had moved to New York and did not see a reason to go out of his way to make the wager. D'oh.

19-1 That was the Cubs' record entering Thursday when they score four runs or more. They also led the majors in runs scored with 159 before Thursday's slate of games.

TEAM CAPTAIN AMERICA

STEVE ROGERS/ CAPTAIN AMERICA (Chris Evans)

Last seen: Training the latest incarnation of the Avengers at the end of "Avengers: Age of Ultron."
Motivation: Steve Rogers has grown increasingly skeptical that governments are motivated by doing the right thing. He spells out his stance in one of the "Civil War" trailers: "I know we're not perfect, but the safest hands are still our own."

BUCKY BARNES/ WINTER SOLDIER (Sebastian Stan)

Last seen: Evading capture after the mayhem in Washington, D.C., in "Captain America: The Winter Soldier." (Though we learn in a post-credits scene of "Ant-Man" that Cap and the Falcon have caught up to him; this is actually a scene from "Civil War.")
Motivation: Brainwashed for decades into carrying out assassinations for Russia and shadowy figures, Captain America's best friend has made a lot of enemies and would prefer to stay off everyone's radar.

SAM WILSON/ FALCON (Anthony Mackie)

Last seen: Preparing to raise his superhero game as part of the reconfigured Avengers.
Motivation: He fought side by side with Cap in "The Winter Soldier" and helped him find Bucky. Falcon also is a military veteran but has grown to like being detached from the system.

WANDA MAXIMOFF/ SCARLET WITCH (Elizabeth Olsen)

Last seen: Learning to master her powers and be a team player after helping to take down Ultron.
Motivation: For most of her life, Maximoff wanted revenge on Stark for his role in ravaging her native Sokovia. She came to her senses after learning that Ultron planned to annihilate the planet, but she's going to be hard-pressed to embrace Iron Man's point of view on something like hero registration.

CLINT BARTON/ HAWKEYE (Jeremy Renner)

Last seen: Becoming a dad for the third time and trying to focus on remodeling his house as opposed to shooting arrows at bad guys.
Motivation: This man kept his wife and family a secret from virtually everyone for years. He's not about to register for some list if he can help it.

SCOTT LANG/ ANT-MAN (Paul Rudd)

Last seen: Trying to keep on the straight and narrow to make his daughter proud and prove worthy of the Ant-Man suit. He did stop a maniacal scientist, so he's off to a good start.
Motivation: Lang discovered that the company he worked for was cheating his customers. He surreptitiously refunded the customers' money, landing him in prison, so he's not the biggest fan of the rich and/or powerful. Combined with the fact that Hank Pym, Lang's mentor and creator of the Ant-Man suit, distrusts SHIELD and organizations like it, teaming with Cap is a no-brainer.

TEAM IRON MAN

TONY STARK/ IRON MAN (Robert Downey Jr.)

Last seen: Passing the torch to the new team of Avengers and theoretically hanging up his armor at the end of "Age of Ultron." He seemed relieved to get out of the superhero game.
Motivation: Stark has gone from arrogant war profiteer to someone who is more mindful of the damage war causes. At least until he creates an evil artificial intelligence. It has taken a while, but even he is starting to think power without supervision is a bad thing.

NATASHA ROMANOV/ BLACK WIDOW (Scarlett Johansson)

Last seen: Serving as Captain America's top lieutenant for the "new" team of Avengers.
Motivation: She dumped all of SHIELD's secrets onto the Internet in "The Winter Soldier," indicating she's not as protective of skeletons in the closet as she once was. Chances are she's a bit burned out after living in the shadows most of her life and doesn't want the burden of saving the world to fall on the shoulders of the few.

T'CHALLA/ BLACK PANTHER (Chadwick Boseman)

Last seen: This is his first appearance in the Marvel Cinematic Universe.
Motivation: We see him shielding himself from a huge blast in one of the "Civil War" trailers at what looks to be a United Nations summit. He likely blames the Winter Soldier and wants to bring him to justice, which aligns him with Iron Man for the time being.

JAMES RHODES/ WAR MACHINE (Don Cheadle)

Last seen: Swooping in to assist the Avengers in defeating Ultron and preparing for a role as permanent member of the team.
Motivation: Rhodes probably is relieved that Stark, his best friend, has embraced the notion that policing the world singlehandedly is unnecessary. As he told Stark in "Iron Man 2," "You don't have to do this alone."

VISION (Paul Bettany)

Last seen: Preparing to take his cues from Captain America after helping to destroy Ultron.
Motivation: Shortly after his creation, Vision declares he's "on the side of life." Instituting checks and balances probably makes sense to him as a way to keep civilians out of the crossfire.

PETER PARKER/ SPIDER-MAN (Tom Holland)

Last seen: This is his first appearance in the Marvel Cinematic Universe.
Motivation: Eagle-eyed moviegoers may have seen this scrolling headline in "Ant-Man": "Stark Industries announces new scholarships for promising students from urban city schools." The likely scenario is Parker and Stark became friends through the program, and the "genius billionaire playboy philanthropist" can be very persuasive.

PROJECTED MATCHUPS

If we were treating "Captain America: Civil War," particularly the airport battle depicted in the trailers, as the most epic game of six-on-six basketball in history, these would be each hero's defensive assignment.

IRON MAN VS. CAPTAIN AMERICA

Tony Stark won't miss a chance to punch Cap in his "perfect teeth," and Steve Rogers knows taking down his most vocal opponent will be a priority.

WAR MACHINE VS. FALCON

Expect the two servicemen to go head to head in part because they both have tech that allows them to fly.

BLACK PANTHER VS. WINTER SOLDIER

They have similar skill sets, and Black Panther's suit is bulletproof, so it's not as simple as Bucky aiming a gun at T'Challa and ending the fight that way.

SPIDER-MAN VS. ANT-MAN

The classic humanoid arachnid vs. humanoid insect matchup (or maybe just the first one). Ant-Man can hide from many heroes by shrinking, but he'll have a tougher time fooling the wall crawler's spider sense.

BLACK WIDOW VS. HAWKEYE

The only two characters in this showdown without superpowers or a fancy suit. These two friends threw down in "The Avengers" when Hawkeye was brainwashed by Loki, though this time they might simply be trying not to kill each other.

VISION VS. SCARLET WITCH

These might be the two most badass players on the battlefield considering Vision has an Infinity Stone in his head and the Scarlet Witch's power is derived from it.

HERO vs. HERO

CATCH UP ON THE CHARACTERS IN 'CAPTAIN AMERICA: CIVIL WAR'

By Chris Sosa | REDEYE

So it's come to this. Two of the most iconic superheroes out there, Iron Man and Captain America, are at each other's throats. And all because some heroes would prefer not to answer to bureaucrats. That's the gist of "Captain America: Civil War," which is expected to crush it at the box office. While keeping in mind that there are traditional bad guys in the movie as well, the main draw is the bench-clearing brawl featuring 12 (mostly) good guys. Half of them back smartass inventor Tony Stark, and the other half support unfrozen war hero Steve Rogers. And some of the heroes are making their movie debut as far as this thread of the Marvel universe is concerned. That's a LOT of storylines to piece together, so consider this your primer if you're an Avengers newbie or don't have all these films memorized (don't judge me!). @REDEYESPORTS | CHOSOSA@REDEYECHICAGO.COM

‘Civil War’ is a fun, action-packed sequel

Sara Amato

It's hard not to draw comparisons between “Captain America: Civil War” and “Batman v Superman: Dawn of Justice.” Both films pit iconic and beloved superheroes against one another and touch on what it means to be a hero. But Friday's release of the third installment of the “Captain America” franchise is a vastly superior action-hero flick that will leave viewers in awe of its immense joy, heart and tight storytelling.

“Civil War” picks up a year after “Avengers: Age of Ultron.” Steve Rogers/Captain America (Chris Evans), Natasha Romanoff/Black Widow (Scarlett Johansson), Wanda Maximoff/Scarlet Witch (Elizabeth Olsen) and Sam Wilson/Falcon (Anthony Mackie) are on a mission in Lagos when the battle goes wrong. After years of fatalities and destruction, the government, along with Tony Stark/Iron Man (Robert Downey Jr.), encourages the Avengers to agree to be placed under the jurisdiction of the United Nations.

The Avengers are split: Stark supports it as he's haunted by the destruction he has caused, but Rogers disagrees. But when another attack occurs and implicates James “Bucky” Barnes/The Winter Soldier (Sebastian Stan), Rogers goes off the rails to figure out the truth behind the attack.

When Stark is asked to stop Rogers, it comes down to two teams: Team Iron Man and Team Captain America. Stark recruits Peter Parker (Tom Holland as Spider-Man) and introduces T'Challa/Black Panther (Chadwick Boseman) to the Marvel Universe. Rogers brings back Clint Barton/Hawkeye (Jeremy Renner) and Scott Lang/Ant-Man (Paul Rudd) to fight for his side.

It's an all-out war between both sides. You won't find a better, more entertaining fight scene than the airport sequence in “Civil War.” It's fun to see both sides fighting for what they believe in and the value placed on why the Avengers do what they do: to save people, to be heroes, to do right by the world. As an audience member, it's tough to pick sides, as both men are standing up for what they believe in. And you want both characters to walk away with a win. While “Civil War” could be mistaken as a third “Avengers” film—and trust me, it can be—at its core, it's a movie about two men and their stubborn wills and desire to stick to what they believe is right.

“Civil War” never falters in its 146-minute runtime. It's gripping, action-packed and often joyful entertainment, a true testament to the plan Marvel has for its cinematic universe. Its continuity with the previous “Winter Soldier” installment is important, and directors Anthony and Joe Russo intertwine the story effortlessly without losing coherence. For example, the movie kicks off with a 1991 flashback to Bucky as he's activated as the Winter Soldier. A first assignment leads him to a car accident and wiping an unidentified serum from the car. It's a flashback that the Russo brothers keep coming back to, holding out for an emotional resolution toward the end.

While Marvel isn't breaking new ground with its storytelling, “Civil War” stays light and funny in between the tense, high-stakes moments, and that's what's going to keep bringing audiences back for more.

While superhero movies are often mythical and out of this world, “Civil War” brings it back down to earth. It's simply just a story about the bonds of friendship, doing the right thing when presented with a difficult decision and how we're ultimately shaped by our choices.

LENNY GILMORE/REDEYE

Honey garlic butter K-Wings

$10 at En Hakkore 2.0, 1467 N. Milwaukee Ave. 773-278-5959

WORTH A TRIP

By Michael Nagrant | FOR REDEYE

According to the Bible, Samson killed a thousand men with a donkey's jawbone. And as one is after slaying an army with a mule's mandible, Samson was pretty tired and thirsty. So he prayed that his powers would be restored. As the story goes, his cries were answered with a spring, where he quenched his thirst, regained his power and went on to rule Israel for 20 years.

Still following? This is important because that spring where Samson discovered his newfound power was called En-Hakkore. In 2013, Peter and Faith Park opened a restaurant in Bucktown named En Hakkore, hoping their food could offer restorative comfort to patrons. It did. So many folks gobbled down the signature paratha tacos and bibimbap that the Parks were inspired to open En Hakkore 2.0 in Wicker Park a few weeks ago.

While the "2.0" is a nice touch, using software naming convention isn't particularly apt. It suggests gradual changes, you see, and En Hakkore 2.0 is a full evolution. Its menu—rife with hot pots, Korean seafood pancakes and mini-football-sized sushi burritos—is completely different from the original restaurant.

"There were a lot of things I wanted to do at the first place, but the kitchen was small. I didn't have the room," Peter Park said.

Before visiting, I didn't really believe the world needed sushi burritos. I was wrong. After eating Park's ethereally light Crunch sushi burrito ($12) stuffed with shrimp tempura, unagi, cream cheese, sweet potato, cucumber, lettuce and plum guacamole, I'm questioning the woefully inefficient tradition of eating eight pieces of maki when you can simply wolf down one gigantic handheld roll.

But this isn't about frou-frou modern conveniences. This is about the restorative powers of food. If that's what you're after, an order of honey garlic butter K-Wings is what you want. These aren't the dinky chicken scraps you'll find at other wing-slinging chains; they're Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson-sized bites. The massive hunks of poultry are deep-fried and lacquered with a golden, sweet glaze, and they waft enough garlic to kill every character on your favorite vampire-centric TV show.

Despite the lack of Wet-Naps, I plowed through all six wings and licked the sticky residue from my fingers with abandon. As I walked out, I felt like I could fight off an army of MMA cage fighters with a single chicken wing bone. OK, maybe not, but damn if I wasn't satisfied.

Kentucky Derby horse or Chicago craft beer?

By Heather Schroering | REDEYE

The only thing more ridiculous than craft beer names is Kentucky Derby horse names. And by more ridiculous, we mean Nosufeforyou and Panty Raid, for example. Enter Suds or Steeds, a game that pairs up 20 real Chicago craft brews with thoroughbreds rostered to run in the 142nd Kentucky Derby on Saturday (race time is 5:34 p.m. on NBC). Guess which name is a beer and check your answers below. Plus, all of the beers on the list are currently available in stores, bars and taprooms, so let this game double as a list of sipping potentials for your pal's Derby party. 1	What's the biggest misconception about being a DJ?	That it takes any kind of talent, or that as long as you can count to four and have all the Future mixtapes, you'll be fine.	A lot of people think it's just nonstop turning up. There's always so much to do work-wise.	That DJs hate taking requests. We appreciate when someone takes the time to help tell us how to do our job.	That I have or know where to get drugs.	No algorithm can work a room like a professional DJ. We work for you to be lit and Snapchat everything.
2	Which celebrity's wedding would you love to DJ and why?	I don't do weddings. But I heard Boi Jeanius will play your special day for $50 and a plate of tamales.	Seth Rogen. I imagine a huge Wu-Tang rap-along with Jonah Hill in there.	Mark Wahlberg. You know once he gets drunk you will hear some crazy tirades. Also for white people dancing.	Aziz Ansari. Not only is he funny, but you know the food would be amazing.	Will and Jada's wedding would have been fun. I feel I'm the Mexican Fresh Prince.
3	Which genre of music would you consider underrated in your line of work and why?	Drum & Bass, hands down. Most interesting production and sound design, but people have no idea how to dance to it.	Yacht Rock. Michael McDonald has a song for every mood I've ever felt.	EDM. It's a shame more DJs don't play it. Especially right when the club opens at the beginning of the night.	Post Future Elephant Step. Also, good Top 40 remixes are a lifesaver.	The original versions of songs. They never really get to live. No, we do not need your bootleg/remix.
4	If your DJ name were also a superhero name, what would your powers be?	A Steph Curry-esque jump shot, so I can finally stop DJing and start for the Bulls.	The ability to karaoke any '80s or '90s song ever and nail it.	The power to drop 'bows on mefos. (Sorry, couldn't think of anything better.)	Mastery of the Italian language.	You'd get zapped per request unless you're holding $100.
5	When you find yourself on the dance floor, how would you describe your moves?	Somewhere between Nelly in the "Tip Drill" video and Drake in his "Hotline Bling" box.	Remember that "SNL" skit with Chris Farley auditioning for the Chippendales? Exact same.	If Elaine Benes had a baby with Carlton Banks and it was trained by Bill Nye the Science Guy.	Arms crossed and judging.	My Up-Rock is tight and my 2 step is strong. I can step with the best of them.

BRAIN CANDY

- » A 17th-century clay pipe was found near Shakespeare's garden that contained traces of cocaine, marijuana and myristic acid.
- » In 1814, about 390,000 gallons of beer flooded into London streets during what is now known as the London Beer Flood.
- » By some accounts, the Amish population in Pennsylvania is responsible for the invention of the whoopie pie.

THE DIGIT

250M

That's how many streams Drake's new album, "Views," got in its first week. According to ew.com, that number equals about what Kanye West's "The Life of Pablo" had in its first month and a half. "Views" has also sold more than 1 million albums on iTunes and has taken iTunes' No. 1 album spot from Beyoncé. Gasp! How could he? It's fine. We all like the view.

THE QUOTE

"THIS SHOW IS SO CENTERED AROUND ME, AND I MEAN THAT IN A WAY OF CONFIDENCE, OF STRENGTH."

—Selena Gomez, to The Hollywood Reporter, about her "Revival" tour, which kicks off Friday in Las Vegas. She's donating proceeds from each ticket sold to the Alliance for Lupus Research. Gomez was diagnosed with lupus and had to cancel parts of her "Stars Dance" tour to undergo chemotherapy treatment in 2013.

It's morphin' time

On Thursday, Lionsgate released the first photo of the Power Rangers from the upcoming movie. "It's tricky finding a new language for a superhero costume," production designer Andrew Menzies told Entertainment Weekly. "Ours is an alien costume that grows on them, that's not man-made." The new suits are ... definitely different. They're not spandex, but rather "translucent extraterrestrial armor that crystallizes around their bodies," according to ew.com. To be honest, it looks a lot like Iron Man. Just sayin.'

More 'Dear White People'

Netflix is turning the 2014 film "Dear White People" into a series. According to vulture.com, the Netflix series will be 10 half-hour episodes and be written by Justin Simien, who wrote and directed the film. The series is set to debut in 2017. It's unknown if any of the characters from the movie will be returning for the TV series.

Trump can't get no satisfaction

The Rolling Stones asked Donald Trump in a statement on Wednesday to quit playing their songs at his campaign events. According to thr.com, the Republican presidential candidate has used "You Can't Always Get What You Want" and "Start Me Up" at past events, but the band said Wednesday that they had not given permission to the Trump campaign to do so and have requested that the campaign "cease all use." The Rolling Stones join Steven Tyler and Adele in asking Trump to not use their music.
